INTRODUCTION

THE collection of drawings by Old Masters in the Library of Christ Church, Oxford, has, mainly in consequence of the publication in facsimile of some of its most striking contents, acquired a considerable if somewhat indefinite reputation. It would appear that some printed account of the collection is desired by students of drawings, whose visits and inquiries, often in search of the work of artists not represented in it, show that mistaken ideas of what it does and does not contain are widely prevalent. The following index, abstracted from the detailed manuscript catalogue in the Library, is an attempt to supply the necessary information; and the volume, with its reproductions of one hundred and twenty-five of the most interesting works, has been designed as a companion to the useful manuals on the drawings in the Galleries of the Brera, Genoa, and Pavia, recently published by Alfieri and Lacroix of Milan.

Although the paintings in the Library have been, for more than a hundred and fifty years, amongst the principal sights of Oxford, and are noticed in all the old guide-books, the drawings, mostly bequeathed at the same time (1765) as the pictures and by the same Benefactor, General John Guise, remained almost unknown for nearly a century. Formidable restrictions barred access to the twenty portfolios containing the 1,734 drawings. The first cognoscente to secure, in spite of these restrictions, an opportunity of examining the drawings at his leisure and making notes of the most important specimens, was Johann David Passavant (1787-1861), Inspector of the Stadel Institute at Frankfurt. Passavant, in the course of collecting materials for his well-known Life of Raphael, made a journey through England in 1831, and afterwards published an account of the picture-galleries and museums which he visited. The book was translated into English under the title, Tour of a German Artist in England, 2 volumes, 1836. Of the present collection the author observes (vol. i, p. 230): 'Through a special introduction to Messrs. Pusey and Buckland, we obtained the rare favour of examining these drawings, and were further permitted to make a catalogue of them. What renders the inspection of this collection so difficult of attainment, is the indispensable necessity of all visitors being attended by a master of arts—a condition laid down by the testator, and which, considering that the examination of these drawings cannot occupy less than from two to three days, is an obligation which a member of the University has seldom time or inclination to fulfil. I am, therefore, the more indebted for the extraordinary kindness shown me in this respect by Professor Buckland. In compliance with his wish, I made a particular catalogue of those drawings which are most deserving of notice, so that by arranging them accordingly, they may be rendered more immediately accessible.' The catalogue here mentioned can only be that, specifying less than fifty drawings, printed in the second volume of the Tour, pp. 131-40. In spite of its scanty proportion and some very astonishing omissions, it bears witness to the probability that Passavant passed the whole collection in review with some care.

The next notice occurs in Dr. Waagen's famous book, Treasures of Art in Great Britain, 1854 (vol. iii, p. 47). Dr. Waagen evidently had to content himself with the favour of a cursory examination of the portfolios. 'During my second visit'—to England, that is—'in 1850 I was introduced by Professor Müller to the celebrated Philologist Gaisforth', so he writes, 'Dean of this College, who had the great kindness to show me the collection of drawings by Old Masters, bequeathed also by General Guise to this College, and preserved in a set of portfolios. As I entirely agreed with Passavant's opinions of the best of these—having his work by me at the time—and as I had not the time to make notes myself, I avail myself of some of his remarks.' The observations which follow these words are, accordingly, selected and condensed from those of Passavant. Waagen concludes by remarking that 'it is much to be desired, for the sake of the connoisseur, that the above-mentioned drawings should be gleaned from the mass of not genuine or less important specimens, and preserved in a portfolio by themselves'. As a result of the suggestions of the two German critics some steps were taken towards forming a select series; and the portfolios, in which the drawings were kept until they were remounted, appear to have been re-adapted for the collection about that time. That this improvement was not, however, carried far is clearly apparent from the report drawn up by the late Sir Charles Robinson and submitted to Dean Liddell in November, 1868. Robinson, who was at that time engaged upon his memorable catalogue of the Michelangelo and Raphael drawings belonging to the University, evidently achieved an opportunity of completely overhauling the whole of the portfolios at Christ Church. It is not too much to say that his report actually records the discovery of the collection ; and, as it remains in manuscript, no apology is required for quoting some of the most interesting passages from it.

‘The Guise Collection’, under Robinson’s acute and sympathetic scrutiny, ‘yielded a larger proportion of interesting and important drawings even than I was prepared to expect. It is unusually rich in the rare class of drawings by masters of the fifteenth and first half of the sixteenth centuries. I have also, I think, had the satisfaction of noting a certain number of authentic drawings of the greatest masters, not previously known to exist, some of which are of considerable historical importance. Although a large proportion is comparatively worthless, the collection, as a whole, is, as I believe, of much higher value than has been usually supposed. From time to time some of the most obviously important works seem to have been noted and laid aside, by persons possessing special knowledge ; but judging from the number of valuable drawings apparently still undiscovered, i.e. remaining buried in the confused mass of miscellaneous specimens at the time of my inspection, I apprehend no thoroughly complete and systematic examination of the entire collection can ever have been made. The drawings, in fact, are still for the most part mixed together in a state of almost complete disorder in the old portfolios.’ Before briefly enumerating the treasures of which he, in Horace Walpole’s phrase, was making a present to Christ Church, the writer comments upon the dilapidation which the drawings were suffering and the absence of any inventory. He predicts that 'there will in future years be a growing desire on the part of lovers of art to inspect this collection', and points out that the intolerable charge to the custodians, and irksomeness to students of examining it under the restrictions described by Passavant can easily be obviated by framing the really valuable drawings, which he estimates at between one and two hundred in number, and permanently exhibiting them. A second selection, of less interest than the first, might, he thought, be bound up in volumes and kept apart for reference; what remained when these two classes had been withdrawn were to be left to their fate in the portfolios. The fruit of this brilliant report was the purchase of a revolving screen in which an odd selection of drawings, chosen apparently in a haphazard way, was displayed for a good many years. But the desire of the public to inspect the collection grew, as Sir Charles had foretold, and was whetted by the loan of ninety-one specimens to an exhibition held at the Grosvenor Gallery in 1878-9, and, even more, by the publication of a volume of photographic facsimiles of forty-eight of them.

When the late Mr. Frederick York Powell, Regius Professor of Modern History, became Librarian of Christ Church his attention was attracted to the condition in which the drawings lay, and he formed an extensive scheme for remounting and rearranging them. It is presumed that he contemplated mounting the entire series, a proceeding that neither Waagen nor Sir Charles Robinson had advised. As a beginning about nine hundred and sixty drawings were in 1900-4 mounted in a beautiful style with tinted borders in the Mariette taste by M. Gueraut. Unfortunately they were sent to the mounter's in confused masses as they were turned out of the portfolios. The result was that costly mounts were bestowed upon hundreds of drawings of trifling value, and that when, after the expenditure of a magnificent sum, the work was suspended by Mr. Powell's death (1904), a number of important sheets remained unattended to. Forty-five of these were selected from the residue and mounted under the superintendence of Sir Sidney Colvin. The present writer, after repeatedly reviewing the entire collection, set aside forty-six more as worthy, either from their intrinsic quality or from their connexion with works already in it, to find places in the mounted series. The anomalous form of this series, which is evident to all who examine the solanders or the catalogue, is due, it must be confessed, primarily to the lamentable lack of discrimination in the first instance. On the other hand it may safely be said that the unmounted residue of some seven hundred sheets now contains nothing of importance and very little of any interest whatever.

The collection thus emerged step by step from the seclusion in which it had long lain, but its place amongst the foremost cabinets of its class was not generally recognized until the publication (1903-7) of three volumes containing 126 facsimiles of a selection from its contents and from those of the University Collection. The editing of this work, which had been planned and carried forward by the enthusiasm of Mr. York Powell, was placed in the hands of Sir Sidney Colvin, who after Mr. Powell's death superintended the prosecution, in a modified form, of his scheme for mounting and arranging the drawings themselves. In his General Introduction to the book (p. 7) Sir Sidney Colvin describes a plan for forming a select series on the lines laid down by Passavant and Robinson, but he was unfortunately prevented by more pressing engagements from putting it into execution. When the task of setting the drawings in order finally fell into the hands of the present writer he found that, even carried out with wider knowledge and more positive judgement than he could lay claim to, the formation of a select series, excepting in so far as it might simply have meant dividing the specimens into an early and a late section, would actually do the collection an injustice. There are several reasons for this.

After a general survey of the cabinet the candid critic must admit that neither very profound connoisseurship nor, probably, very lavish expenditure, according to the standards of the period when it was forming, can have been devoted to its formation. This is shown by the fact that the works of the early renaissance, then considered mere curiosities and doubtless bought for small sums, are its most valuable feature, while of the cloud of drawings attributed to the greatest masters of the golden age one or two alone in each case are authentic and scarcely one is of imposing quality or dimensions. The same must be said of the specimens of the great eclectic painters whose studies were unquestionably the most coveted by amateurs of the period of General Guise. But here, as elsewhere, the mass of minor works of eminent artists or of more imposing drawings by unimportant artists, and even of ancient copies (as in the instances of Raphael, Titian, Giorgione, and Mantegna) produces an impressive and instructive effect. Again, the interest of the valuable series of decorative designs, many of which seem to have been collected together long before they were acquired by General Guise, could scarcely be made recognizable in a selection. And not only do the numerous landscape studies by Italo-Flemish masters of the seventeenth century, culminating in a striking group of sketches by Claude and his followers, illustrate one another best when kept together, but a predilection of the Collector's, which they in conjunction with the fine series of drawings by Domenico Campagnola indicate, is thus duly brought into prominence. The sheets of Northern origin are in any case few in number, and by picking out the one precious Dürer, the Rembrandt and a handful of genuine studies by Rubens and Vandyck, this department would be rendered almost meaningless. Having, therefore, discarded the idea of selection it seemed best to revert in the arrangement to what was doubtless the original intention of the collector — the illustration, that is to say, of the development of graphic art from the period of the early Siennese and Florentine Schools to that of Carlo Maratta and other artists who survived into General Guise's own lifetime. The division into schools has been somewhat modified in accordance with modern theories, but is not carried to the point of setting up a number of small classes which could each consist of one or two items only; thus, for instance, the few drawings by Lombard pupils of Leonardo have been placed with the works of the master himself amongst the Florentine School, and two or three Ferrarese-Bolognese specimens with the Venetian and Veronese section. Within this classification the arrangement is chronological according to the date of death of each artist.

The contents of the thirty-two solander cases fall naturally into ten divisions:

I. [Seven solanders, A-G.] Tuscan and Umbrian Schools, extended to include the works of all the manneristic artists primarily influenced by the Raffaellesque or the Michel-angesque tradition. All the important drawings in the early part of this division have been described and reproduced by Mr. Berenson or Sir Sidney Colvin. Amongst them, in accordance with Mr. Berenson's admittedly anomalous but convenient arrangement, will be found the drawings by Sebastiano del Piombo, as they happen to be some of those most important in the discussion of the Michelangelo-Sebastiano problem. The section closes with the year 1650.

II. [Four solanders, H-L.] Venetian and Northern Italian Schools. This begins with a series of sheets from the Veronese Schools of Zevio and Pisanello. The best of the Venetian drawings are already well known from Sir Sidney Colvin's publication; some of the less important specimens bear curious attributions made by Carlo Ridolfi, to whose collection they once belonged. It is not certainly known whether the numerous sketches of sculpture by Tintoretto came from this source. This series ends with several studies by Piazzetta.

III. [Solander M.] Parmesan School. Two or three drawings with unusually good claims to be accepted as Correggios and a long series assigned to Parmigianino make this one of the most attractive sections of the cabinet. Some of the most striking of the latter may belong to the class of Flemish imitations which are possibly not less numerous than the Netherlandish forgeries of early pictures which have been pilloried by Morelli.

IV. [Solander N.] Naturalistic School. This consists almost exclusively of two groups, one of drawings, good of their sort, by the prolific and ubiquitous Luca Cambiaso; the other of designs, representing episodes in a siege, by Bernardo Castelli. There is no genuine specimen of Salvator Rosa's work.

V. [Five solanders, O-S.] The Eclectic Schools, beginning with the Carracci, who are not, unfortunately, well represented. As the local characteristics of the schools of Italy tended to merge towards the middle of the sixteenth century, so a hundred years later eclecticism and mannerism became almost indistinguishable; all drawings by Italian artists who died after 1650 are, therefore, included in one category. Numerically the collection is richest in studies ascribed to Guercino; few of these, however, are in his best manner and several are probably forgeries. One or two excellent sketches by Guido and some attributed, most likely with justice, to minor artists are effective and interesting.

VI. [Five solanders, T-X.] The contents of these to some extent represent, in spite of what has been said above, the retention of a selective principle, and consist of specimens which had better not have been mounted. The first three cases are filled with drawings bearing incredible attributions to the greatest masters and to some minor ones of the early and golden ages. The other two contain anonymous sheets.

VII. [Solander Z.] Drawings of antique architectural remains and sculpture. The more important of these were lent to the Topographical Section, in the Castello di Sant' Angelo, of the International Exhibition at Rome, 1911.

VIII. [Five solanders, AA-EE.] The interesting collection of designs for silversmiths' work, architectural features and decoration, title-pages, theatrical scenery, &c. It is not unlikely that this series was originally put together in great part at Mantua; its most important element is the set of designs for silver plate assigned, with every appearance of probability, to Guilio Romano, and executed, as the arms and inscriptions occasionally show, during his Mantuan period (1542-6). Unluckily many of the drawings have been cut out round the outlines and pasted down on to new paper, much evidence of their history having been lost in the process.

IX. Landscapes. This division begins with drawings by the Carracci and Brill which, as they are connected with the somewhat indefinite class of designs supposed to be for theatrical scenery, are placed with those in solander EE. It also forms, in the numerous beautiful examples by Claude and his imitators, the principal contents of solander FF, which is devoted to the French School.

X. [Two solanders.] Northern Schools. Case GG is filled with Flemish works, including amongst others the remarkable studies by Rubens and Vandyck which have been published by Sir Sidney Colvin. HH contains the German, Dutch, and English drawings. They are few in number and all the best are represented in Colvin's work.

The introduction to Sir Sidney Colvin's volumes contains a sketch of the origin of the Christ Church collection in the bequest of General John Guise (d. July 12, 1765) and of the sources from which he in turn had drawn his accumulations. For various reasons, notably the fact that most of the old mounts have been preserved, the study of this cabinet throws considerable light upon the early history of this and other famous collections of ancient drawings once among the most proudly valued of the ancestral art treasures of England now lamentably dispersed and depatriated. Upon this account a few further details are worth recording.

The original fountain-heads of all such collections, the portfolios of Giorgio Vasari and the Vite-Antaldi family, have contributed two actual pages, with the original decorative borders, from the famous volume of Vasari and a few sheets bearing the initials R. V. with which the drawings once belonging to Timoteo Vite are marked. The beautiful studies by Filippino Lippi from the Vasari collection are well known amongst the choicest possessions of the Christ Church cabinet. The drawings with the R. V. mark bear witness to the fact observed by Sir Charles Robinson when he published the seventeenth-century inventory of the Antaldi collection, that these letters are found upon many drawings of little merit which never, in all probability, formed part of the series originally amassed by Timoteo Vite. Most venerable after these signs of ownership are the two stars (Fagan, Collectors' Marks, 569) supposed to be the mark of either Thomas, Earl of Arundel—'The Father of Virtù in England'—or of King Charles I, or, with greater probability, of Nicholas Lanier and his brothers. A legend has obtained currency that a large collection of drawings, nearly fourteen hundred in number, formed by Lord Arundel for King Charles, is incorporated in the Christ Church cabinet. It is scarcely necessary to say that this is a myth; the number of sheets in the mounted series bearing the star mark (itself only problematically connected with the King or the Earl) is only sixteen.

Five marks, presumably of the seventeenth century, unknown to or unidentified by Fagan, are found on drawings here; one of them is particularly intrigant as the eighteen drawings upon which it occurs are many of them of superior merit. It shows a cartouche upon which is an outstretched hand holding a torch. Thirty-five works, including amongst them the considerable group of landscapes by Domenico Campagnola, come from the famous cabinet of Sir Peter Lely, one of them bearing his initials in a form not noted by Fagan as well as the usual monogram.¹ The collection of Prosper Henry Lançrinc, Lely's assistant, whose stamp, especially when placed upon Flemish drawings of the period of Rubens and Vandyck, is generally a guarantee of excellence, has contributed fourteen drawings to the present cabinet. In fact, through all the great channels through which ancient drawings flowed into England during the seventeenth century some specimens passed to a final anchorage in the Guise collection.

Early in the following century arrived another and a prodigious accession to the treasure of such works in this country. A series of more than two thousand studies recently put together for Monsignore Marchetti, Bishop of Arezzo, by the celebrated amateur Padre Sebastiano

Resta, came into the market. They were arranged in sixteen volumes according to a fanciful scheme of the type affected by the Oratorian Father, 'intelligente di questa materia, e fra' più fortunati e più ricchi raccoglitori di opere di disegno che abbiano esistito', as he is described by Cicognara. This great collection was bought entire in 1710 by John Lord Somers (1651-1715), and after his death dispersed by auction in 1717. About twenty-five drawings from the Resta-Marchetti volumes are in the present series. They may be recognized by the mounts, upon which they were fixed by Padre Resta, with tinted borders in the Mariette taste and the artists' names written beneath in a fine Italian hand; and by the minute script letters and numerals said by Reveley¹ to have been placed upon them while they were in Lord Somers's possession. Padre Resta's credulity and the slightness of his acquaintance with the art of the Renaissance period have been exposed by Lanzi and later critics; none the less he remains an interesting and sympathetic figure in the history of connoisseurship, and the drawings which he prized must always have a sentimental value for students of such works.

Similar mounts, imitated, no doubt intentionally, from those of Padre Resta, distinguish the drawings from the collections of Jonathan Richardson the elder (1665-1745) and his son of the same name (1694-1771). At the sale of their very extensive accumulations (January, 1746-7) General Guise acquired thirty-nine drawings bearing their marks, now in the present series, as well as a number which are unstamped but have their characteristic mounts with remarks in the hand of the younger Richardson written upon them. These remarks are often at variance with modern knowledge and opinion, but the sheets exact a tribute of respect as relics of two of the earliest English art critics, whose manly defence of the Science of a Connoisseur—as they were the first to call it—encouraged and guided the growth of national taste and knowledge in such matters.

In the course of preparing the present catalogue the compiler came upon records of yet another great reservoir of ancient drawings the contents of which seem to have been absorbed by British collectors and by General Guise amongst others. Amongst the Rawlinson manuscripts in the Bodleian Library is a catalogue¹ marked as the gift to Dr. Rawlinson of his friend E. Umfraville in 1748, and as having belonged previously to the Duke of Chandos. James Brydges first Duke (1673-1744)—the 'Timon' of Pope—was well known as a splendid, extravagant patron of the arts, and this catalogue was no doubt prepared for him in the hope that he might purchase the collection in its entirety. The items are for the most part rather summarily described, but one or two seemed to bear relation to drawings in the Christ Church cabinet, and upon examining these they were found to be marked on the back in a peculiar style with numbers corresponding with those of the catalogue. No doubt similar numbers will be found on drawings in other English collections which were forming about 1740.

Besides the stamps already mentioned, those assigned by Fagan (Nos. 420 and 581) to Peter Sylvestre, M.D., (No. 165) Edward Pearf, (No. 214) George, third Earl of Cholmondeley, and (No. 442) Richard Houlditch, as well as some others which he recorded but failed to identify, occur in the present series.

There is still to be mentioned yet another ancient collection once the property of Carlo Ridolfi (1594-1638) the historian of Venetian painting and biographer of Tintoretto, which purports to have been incorporated in the Christ Church cabinet although it is not known how it came there, as we have no reason for supposing that breuse, a été quinze Ans entiers à La faire avec beaucoup de soin et d'amour ; Et il n'auroit Jamais songé a s'en deffaire, S'il n'y avoit été contraint par des raisons particulières faciles à deviner.' The pressmark is Rawl. D. 903. My attention was first drawn to the existence of this manuscript by Mrs. R. L. Poole.

it formed part of the Guise bequest. In its pristine form this collection ought to have been of considerable value. According to the original bindings and title-pages the present portion included three small quarto volumes:—a certain Libro A containing seventy-four drawings put together in 1631; another, Libro B, of seventy-three collected in 1638; and a third, Libro G, consisting of forty-five studies, 1635. As, however, above one hundred and fifty have been cut out and mounted and more than a hundred are still left, something more than the volumes whose title-pages are preserved must have gone to the making of the present albums. These, as they stand, are two volumes, bound apparently in the late eighteenth or early nineteenth century, consisting of modern paper upon which the drawings and titles cut out of the pages of the old books are pasted down. These pages are far too small ever to have contained any of the large studies, such as those by Tintoretto, which, it is natural to imagine, might have belonged to Ridolfi. In fact, the contents of this collection, which raises and disappoints such great expectations, now consist almost entirely of scraps small in size and poor in quality. The little sketch by Leonardo da Vinci for the sleeve of the Angel in his early picture of the Annunciation is the most conspicuous exception. All the drawings have a capital R written upon them and are accompanied by attributions often of the most fantastically ignorant kind. Close examination of the whole series produces an impression that it has been extensively sophisticated; it is only necessary to point to the two drawings attributed, in the hand presumed to be Ridolfi's, to Francesco Vecellio, but bearing strong internal evidence of their origin in the school of Zuccarelli or Zais, as an instance of the small points which raise a great suspicion.

In conclusion, the compiler may be expected to offer some explanation of the canons of criticism followed in this catalogue, or rather, perhaps, to apologize for the neglect of any such rules. In the case of the earlier portion of the series the student has the advantage of the published criticisms of Mr. Berenson and Sir Sidney Colvin. The conclusions of the latter authority are also available in print in connexion with the drawings selected by him for publication from the Northern examples and, more extensively, in manuscript in the form of valuable notes written upon many of the mounts. Similar memoranda by Sir Charles Robinson are invariably acute and suggestive. The compiler may further boast that there is scarcely a cognoscente of eminence who has visited Oxford within the last decade with whom it has not been his privilege to look through the whole or a portion of the cabinet. The debt which the arrangement and catalogue owes to the mass of learning thus imparted in a friendly, informal way is vast indeed, but so difficult to define and acknowledge that it is beyond the writer's powers to attempt the task. Let it suffice that the most brilliant and original suggestions have been recorded with the names of the makers likewise upon the mounts. In cataloguing the nondescript sheets of the earlier period, and the whole of those of the seventeenth century Italian schools which have long been out of the sunshine of fashion, there is little trained or sympathetic criticism to depend upon. The traditional ascriptions have generally been followed not only because—to quote the wise words of Arthur

Strong—‘the stream of tradition has brought down much that was once matter of common knowledge or of easy verification, and that, left to our own resources, however elaborate, we should find it impossible to restore’, but because it is certain that the cognoscenti of the eighteenth century cannot have known less than those of the present day about the Bolognese eclectic and later schools—the objects of their exaggerated admiration, as of our prejudiced neglect. The obvious lack of perspicacity which the old critics showed in their judgement of the work of the early Renaissance is not really more disconcerting than the dearth of modern criticism upon the drawings of the Counter-Reformation and Jesuitic periods. Ascriptions to famous hands were doubtless often made two hundred years ago as they are made now, on commercially interested grounds, but in the case of draughtsmen even then but little known there seems every reason to accept the ancient attributions as accurate.

When the oldest ascriptions have been traversed by specious corrections—even when these are the work of that most detestable class of pests which spreads a snail-like trail of anonymous criticism over the mount of every drawing it touches—the words ‘attributed to’, or cross-references to alternative authors, are employed. Drawings bearing ascriptions that are obviously grotesque are described as ‘anciently attributed’. The works for which no authorship has ever been suggested, grouped according to subjects in the solanders, are arranged in the index under the heading of Italian School in the order of their approximate dates. As every critic of spirit will, of course, think it essential to examine this part of the collection in the pious confidence of detecting great prizes overlooked by the density of his predecessors, it is hoped that the loose agreement between the cases and the catalogue in this section will be little noticed. The compiler wishes he could think that this were the least of the anomalies and errors disfiguring the work. In the fullness of time an inventory pronounced by Sir Charles Robinson an urgent necessity nearly fifty years ago has come into being; how far it falls short of what the wide embracing taste and experience and the clear judgement of that stimulating critic and friend would have made of it, nobody can be more conscious than the present writer.
